Square has announced it is bringing free stock trading to Cash App, allowing users to buy and sell shares, or fractions of shares to make your first investment. With Cash App, you can own a piece of hundreds of different stocks, including the most expensive stock on the market, Berkshire Hathaway Class A, which regularly trades above $300,000 per share. Introducing #CashAppInvesting. Now you can instantly buy stock in your favorite companies with as little as $1 with Cash App. pic.twitter.com/H5vEsqEPKX— Cash App (@CashApp) October 24, 2019 The feature had been rumored earlier this year, and as The Verge notes this feature will sit alongside the ability to trade Bitcoin on the app. According to their report, a spokesperson says that investing on Cash App should be rolling out to all customers in the coming weeks. Cash App is the first app that allows users to both trade stocks without paying fees, and to buy and sell fractions of shares. Image source: Getty Images GameStop shares don't show up on Cash App Investing's trading platform for a simple reason. Cash App is a mobile app that allows you to do a number of financial tasks -- including investing in stocks. When you've downloaded their app, though, you may be surprised to find that you can't trade a few particular stocks -- including GameStop. In fact, when you search the trading platform for stocks of interest, GameStop doesn't show up when you input either the symbol or company name. Cash App Investing is one of a number of online brokers restricting trades of GameStop. And while Cash App hasn't specifically released a statement or a Tweet -- unlike others including Robinhood and Webull, the fact remains that GameStop isn't available to purchase on its trading platform. Although Cash App Invest hasn't released a statement specifically addressing whether you can trade GameStop on its platform or not, it is one of a number of brokerage firms that has either suspended or limited the ability to purchase GameStop shares. Find the best stock broker for you among these top picks. Whether you're looking for a special sign-up offer, outstanding customer support, $0 commissions, intuitive mobile apps, or more, you'll find a stock broker to fit your trading needs. See the picks Robinhood and Webull both barred trading of GameStop entirely, before reversing course. These and other brokers who took action indicated they were prompted to do so due to the volatility of GameStock stock. And it has, indeed, been volatile. Shares have fluctuated widely in recent days, increasing as much as 1640%. All the activity has been driven by a Reddit group that populates a forum called r/WallStreetBets. Members of r/WallStreetBets were bullish on GameStop's prospects with new game consoles coming out, and they took note of the fact that there was heavy short selling activity going on with the stock -- mostly by hedge funds. Forum members banded together with other day traders to initiate a short squeeze, driving the price of the stock up and forcing short sellers to buy shares in order to cover their positions. This had the effect of creating a feedback loop that sent stock prices sharply upward. As trading or imposing new restrictions on it, citing the extreme volatility. While most have now opened up at least some trading, it was shut down for most of the time the market was open on Thursday. Cash App was one of the many that jumped on the bandwagon of halting the purchase of shares not just of GameStop but also of some other companies that had the potential for similar trading activity such as Blackberry and Koss Corporation. While it's not necessarily unprecedented for a stock to temporarily stop trading due to extreme volatility, the complete shutdown of the ability to buy shares for an extended period of time isn't common. And many users of Robinhood and other online brokers expressed dismay over what they feel are actions taken by brokers to protect the interests of Wall Street over retail investors. Cash App's investing platform is newer and not as well known as some of the others, so it escaped some of the social media attention other apps received after preventing down trades. But, it still may come as a disappointment to the app's current and potential future users that this restriction was imposed. The stock price is currently not justified by the underlying fundamentals of the company, so it will have to come sharply back down at some point. Even if shares become available to buy again on Cash App, it may be best to steer clear unless you're willing to take a huge risk. Christy Bieber has no position in any of the stocks mentioned. When you buy Bitcoin futures, what you're actually purchasing is an agreement to receive a certain amount of Bitcoin, or the equivalent amount of money, at a specified time. With this mechanism, you can profit from correctly betting that the price of Bitcoin will go up, which is called going short. It's generally regarded as a risky way of trading, more suited to advanced traders than beginners. Disclaimer: This information should not be interpreted as an endorsement of cryptocurrency or any specific provider, service or offering. It is not a recommendation to trade. Some of the exchanges where you can trade Bitcoin futures Note that the following is a general guide only. Individual trading platforms may have variations on these systems. In its simplest terms, Bitcoin futures exchange and buying Bitcoin futures with it. Profits or losses will be realised when a futures contract is sold, or when it expires naturally. You will typically be able to keep track of your "realised profits" or "realised losses" on an ongoing basis, which shows an approximation of how much you would gain or lose if you were to sell a contract at the current time. Functionally, this is similar to watching your balance rise and fall as the market does. The exact way your total realised profits and losses will balance out depends on how many contracts ize and specifications, and what the market is doing. Some of the factors which will affect how your realised profits and losses move are:Contract size. The contract size is simply how large each contract is. For example, if you bought a thousand contracts, each of which was equivalent to $1, you'd have $1,000 in the market. Sometimes contracts are valued in BTC or another cryptocurrency, and sometimes they're valued in dollars or other fiat currencies. Long or short? Short contracts mean your balance will rise as Bitcoin prices fall and fall when Bitcoin prices do. You can simultaneously have multiple contracts of different types which can offset each other. Leverage. Functionally, this magnifies how much your balance rises or fall 100x faster than normal for the size of that contract. 100x is typically the highest leverage an exchange will offer and you can have different leverage on different accounts. Expiration date. This is the date at which a contract is automatically closed and settled up. You can generally sell your contracts and pocket the gains or losses at any time, but when there's an expiry date, that's when the futures will close. They can sometimes be extended and many exchanges will also offer "perpetual contracts" which don't have a set expiry date, while other futures contracts do. Bitcoin perpetual futures contracts, or "perpetual swaps," will typically track the spot price (the current market price) of Bitcoin. Futures contracts with set expiry dates will often trade higher or lower than the current market prices. What is futures trading used for? Beyond speculation, futures trading can also be used as a risk management tool and a way of playing the market in more depth. Futures contracts can be used to multiply profits, mitigate risks and profit from falling prices. They can also be a very quick way of losing money if you get liquidated, which can happen very quickly when using 100x leverage. Bitcoin futures liquidation and collateralWhen you're trading futures without leverage, the value of your futures contracts. But when you're using leverage, the money used to buy a contract serves as collateral and you're essentially trading on borrowed money. Just like leverage can help you quickly make more money on correct bets, it can also be a very fast way of losing all your funds on incorrect bets. If the markets go the wrong way, you can lose you entire deposit. For example, if you're trading with 100x leverage, then a price change of just 1% could be enough to wipe out all your collateral and trigger liquidation. Different exchanges will often have different liquidation thresholds. For example, some might close your orders once you've lost at least 80% of your collateral, and account for fees in different ways. What are the fees for future trading? A range of fees may apply, including: Trading fees: There will typically be a commission fee for buying or selling cryptocurrency outright. Extension fees: Fees may apply for extending a contract past its usual close date. Overnight fees: Fees may apply when contracts open through certain time periods. Interest payments: When you margin trade, you're borrowing that money. Deposit and withdrawal fees: You might have to pay fees for transferring money in or out of an exchange. Where can I trade Bitcoin futures? Some traditional trading platforms now offer Bitcoin futures include CME and Cboe. These are used to facilitate trading during specific hours, in well-regulated, legitimate and largely transparent environments. Is Bitcoin futures trading is never safe. The markets are prone to manipulation and unpredictable price movements. You can do everything right and still lose money. Some exchanges are also safer than others, depending on how reliable, regulated and legitimate it is. How well regulated and exchange is depends largely on where it's based. Some are largely unregulated, while others such as CME and Cboe are relatively tightly regulated. But to a certain extent, Bitcoin futures trading is always at least a bit dangerous given the volatility. Even on a perfectly legitimate exchange, it's possible to quickly lose money. Pros and cons of Bitcoin futures trading Compared to simply buying and selling Bitcoin, futures trading has some benefits and drawbacks. As the name suggests, these contract types are indefinite without any set expiry date. Depending on the contract, profits may be realised in either Bitcoin or the fiat currency equivalent. It depends on the platform. Some will let you simply trade contracts which track Bitcoin prices with fiat currency deposits, while others will require you to deposit Bitcoin collateral.
